Treatment of Colts. A subscriber at Lexington, Mo., solicits information upon the subject of raising colts, and also wishes to know how he can tell which colts will make large animals.

We recommend (says the Valley Far mer) in the first instance, to those engaged in raising colts, to breed from the best stock that can be procured. Too little attention is paid to this matter. Most people think that if they get colts, that is all that is important-forgetting that a colt, when it becomes a horse, if it prove to be a fine one, will be worth double or treble the amount of a common one. It costs no more to raise a good colt than a poor one, and consequently it must be far more profitable to raise the very best that can be raised. Colts should be allowed to run with the dam until they are about six months old, at which time, as a general rule, we should recommend that they be weaned. Of course it is better not to work the dam at all while the colt draws milk from her. By working patronage bestowed upon him, and solicits a continuous of the same.
